THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

THE Alberta United Services Institute is now entering its 35th year, during which period we have participated in and observed tremendous upheavels in world affairs. The year 1955, however, gives promise of greater stability, and I believe we can look forward quite optimistically to a period of good will, which we can only sincerely hope will develop into something of a permanent nature.

LT.-COL. R. E. LUCY

Our Institute in the military field of affairs has, in my opinion, proven itself to be of a vital nature. The Institute's aims, basically, have been to bring to the members, via lectures by authorities in world affairs, a knowledge of developments in the field of international events, so as we may be kept abreast, insofar as possible, of the problems which confront our nation and our Allies. Furthermore, I believe the exceedingly close liaison between the members of the Institute and the members of the Garrison Officers' Mess is unique indeed, in comparison to other Institutes in Canada. One of our most important aims is to assist in developing the Militia to the best of our ability, and this aspect should be uppermost in our thoughts at all times. Certainly, as ex-officers of Her Majesty's Forces, we have a duty to assist in the development of the Militia in every way possible. The close liaison between the Institute and the Militia must therefore constitute a high priority, to ensure the harmony and good fellowship which presently prevail.

In closing, I would like to express to all members my appreciation of the great honour accorded me in serving as your President for the forthcoming year, and urge all members to support to the fullest extent the functions sponsored by the Institute. I especially invite you to our two major events, the Military Ball and the Vimy Dinner.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS

I AM pleased to report a successful year for this Institute, which I believe is the largest organization in Canada of active, reserve and retired officers who are serving or have served in the Commonwealth forces. The present membership in good standing is approximately eight hundred and fifty and applications continue to be made steadily in large numbers for membership.

LT. COL. W. K. JULL

The Institute held four receptions in the past year beginning with the president's reception for members and their wives. This is an innovation, it was well attended and served the useful purpose of enabling members and their wives to become acquainted with each other as well as with the directors for the year. It will be noted that the directors recommended the continuance of this function. In addition there was a reception to meet Brigadier Rockingham, one to welcome Colonel and Mrs. Menard, the new Officer Commanding Calgary Command, and the usual New Year's Day reception, all of which were well attended.

● Vimy Dinner Cancelled

The dinner to celebrate the Battle of Vimy Ridge was cancelled at the last moment owing to the tragic aeroplane collision at Moose Jaw, which caused the death of Lt.-Col. Rodney Adamson, M.P., the principal speaker, and his wife while on their journey to Calgary. Our deepest regrets and sympathy were expressed to their children and relations.

The Armistice Ball was the usual success.

There were not as many speakers throughout the year as usual and this is to be regretted. This was caused by a number of circumstances which need not be mentioned here. There has been considerable discussion on this point by your directors and your continuing directors will no doubt put into operation steps to obtain speakers in the coming year. Those talks that were given were worth while and enjoyed by those present and our thanks go forward to those who gave them. I must make special mention of the outstanding talk given us on January 31st by Group Captain Bader, D.S.O. and bar, D.F.C. and bar, Legion D'Honneur and Croix de Guerre, on the Battle of Britain. It was attended by the largest number of members and guests at any ordinary meeting in the thirty-four years of this Institute's existence.

● Financial Success

The past year has also been successful from a financial point of view.

I refer in passing to the unfortunate fire which occurred recently in the Garrison Officers' Mess. Most fortunately only one piece of regimental plate was destroyed and none of the pictures and trophies.

I also mention recommendation of your directors concerning the consideration of club premises in the future for this Institution. I mention the matter of the scholarship in memory of Wing Commander Freeman, D.F.C., which was carefully discussed at the meetings of the scholarship committee and of the directors. Their recommendations as to details will come before this meeting for consideration later.

Finally on behalf of the members of the Institution, I wish to thank the Calgary Garrison Officers' Mess with whom we have co-operated on such a friendly basis for so many years, in the use of the Mess and in other matters of mutual interest. I wish also to thank the president and members of the Sergeants' Mess to whom we are indebted for the use of this room for meetings last evening and tonight—and to the Officer Commanding P.P.C.L.I. for his kind offer of accommodation for meetings in the Officers' Mess at Currie Barracks.

I also wish to thank the press and radio stations for their reporting and announcements of matters of importance to us.

● Thanks Directorate

Personally I wish to thank all members of the directorate for their co-operation and assistance willingly given, and in particular those who gave their time so freely in preparation for functions in the past year. I would also mention Major Alan Turney who, though not on the directorate, has done much in many ways to help the Institute. I wish also to express my thanks and that of the other directors to Col. D. G. L. Cunningham who has acted as Honorary Secretary for so many years and whose untiring activity, great personal interest, and wide knowledge and acquaintance with all service matters and persons has done so much during that time to bring the Institute to the active and healthy condition which it is now enjoying. The thanks of this Institute are also due to Major Chambers, who has for many years carried out the difficult duties of Librarian. His work has been made more onerous by a few of those who have kept books for a longer period than they should.

I wish to thank you all for your co-operation and interest in this Institute and your realization of its importance in the service life of this community. I know that you will give the same co-operation to the incoming directorate.

Thank you all again.

SECRETARY-TREASURER'S REPORT

Mr. President and Gentlemen :

I again have the honour to present my report of the activities of the Institute during the past year. The condition of your Institute continues to be in the flourishing state, and though we lose some members, others take their place.

● Meetings

Your president has commented on the sad accident which caused the Vimy Dinner to be abandoned last April. Your directors sent condolences and flowers to the remaining members of the family of the late Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Adamson.

The number of lectures was not as great as previous years due to inability to contact speakers.

● Receptions

It will be noted that the expense for these is higher than formerly. In addition to the Annual New Year's Reception there was the President's Reception (a mixed gathering) and most successful. Receptions were held for Col. Mennard—our new Commandant at Currie — and to Maj.-Gen. Rockingham who was passing through Calgary.

● Cadets

The Institute Cadet Corps has ceased to function due to present army policy and now belongs solely to the Lord Strathcona's Horse (R.C.) However some reserve units have cadet corps attached to them. Your directors recommend that sums of $50.00 each be granted to the navy, air force and army cadets as may be decided on by the incoming directorate.

● W/C Don Freeman Memorial

As decided at the last annual meeting your directors have decided on a scholarship of $300.00. Your president has drawn up conditions for the scholarship which has been approved by your directors.

● Recommendations

Your directors recommend the holding of the Vimy dinner and the Military Ball. Also that the Journal be published. The date of the Vimy Dinner is Saturday, April 16th, and the date fixed for the Ball is November 11th (Friday).

Members may remember the very stirring address given by Gen. Macklin at a Vimy Dinner some years ago. The General has promised to again address us on April 16th.

Your directors recommend to the incoming Directorate that immediate consideration be given to possible increase of Institute dues so as to either acquire premises of their own or to create a fund against the time this should be desirable.

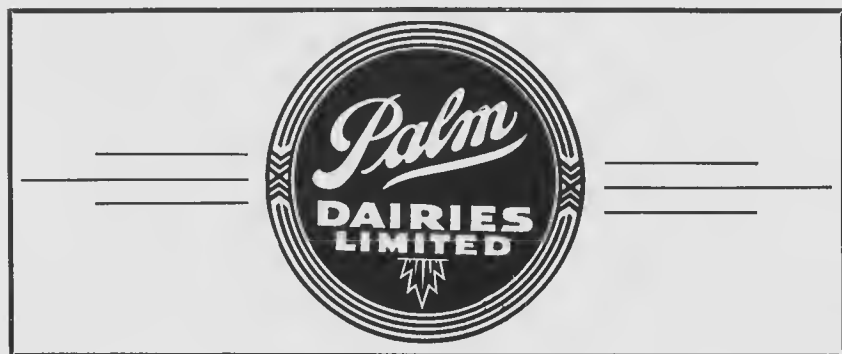

● Applications for Membership

A new form of application has been prepared on the back of which more particulars of the applicant is required than formerly. When received these applications are referred to a Membership Committee before being submitted to a general meeting.

● Grants

The Institute made grants during the year to the A.P.R.A., the South African Veterans' Associations and to the Garrison golf tournament. The auditor made a complete check of the amounts paid to the Garrison Officers' Mess since the Depot turned it back to the Reserve. Based on the usual forty per cent of the dues there is a credit due the Mess at December 31st as shown in the balance sheet.

The Institute again received from the Department of National Defence a grant of $750.00, which is very much appreciated.

● Finances

As treasurer I submit the audited financial statement, which is before you, and which shows a profit on the year's work.

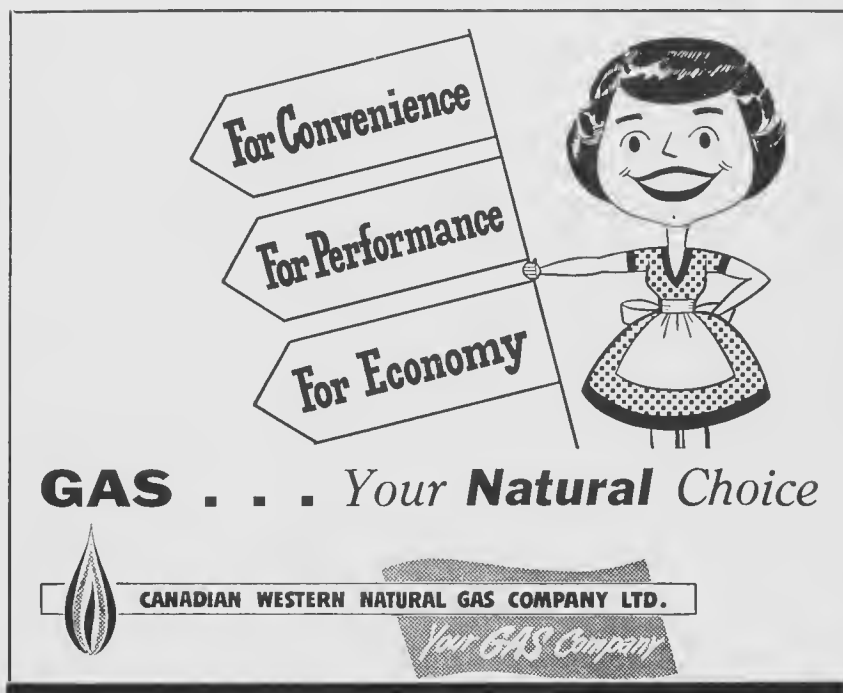

The auditor or myself will endeavour to answer any questions you may wish to ask.

In conclusion I wish to express my thanks to the president and directors, to Capt. Sleen for the Mess for their co-operation, and to Major Harold Chambers for his valuable assistance.

Respectfully submitted,

D. G. L. CUNNINGTON, Colonel,
Honourary Secretary-Treasurer.

THE AUDITOR'S REPORT

The President and Members,
The Alberta United Services Institute.

In accordance with your request, I have examined the balance sheet of The Alberta United Services Institute as at December 31st, 1954, and the statement of revenue and expenses for the year ended on that date. I examined vouchers for disbursements and verified membership dues by examination of membership certificate stubs. I performed such verification of other revenue and the assets and liabilities as I considered appropriate and received all the information and explanations I required.

The provision for the proportion of membership dues payable to the Garrison Officers' Mess represents the balance owing at December 31st, 1954, after giving effect to payments made in prior years.

In my opinion, the balance sheet and related statement of revenue and expenses present a true and correct view of the affairs of the Institute as at December 31st, 1954, and the results of operations for the year ended on that date, according to the best of my information and the explanations given to me and as shown by the books of the Institute.

TROOPS TRAIN FOR A-BOMB WARFARE

(Tuesday afternoon, October 19, 1954, Maj.-Gen. Rockingham met members of the Institute at a Reception held in his honor in the Garrison Officers' Mess.)

MAJ-GEN. J. M. ROCKINGHAM, C.B., C.B.E., D.S.O., E.D., general officer commanding, 1st Canadian Division, said recently there had been considerable changes in the training of Canadian troops—"a change on which we are working all the time".

Gen. Rockingham was in Calgary on a two-day visit of units forming part of his command. These are Lord Strathcona's Horse (RC), the divisional armoured regiment, and the 1st Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles of Canada. He was accompanied by Brig. Ross Bishop, commander, Royal Artillery, R.C.A., for the division.

● Dispersion Needed

"When a formation is likely to be attacked by atom weapons there must be considerable dispersion so there is no target for them to get at. A formation must be capable of doing all operations in the dark or under the cover of artificial fog or some such thing.

"It is also obvious that a formation must be streamlined. There must be a minimum of transport. The less 'gagle' we have on the ground the less attention we are likely to draw.

Modern weapons such as the Belgian FN also made a difference to modern fighting formations. The Fabrique Nationale automatic rifle was "part of the streamlining," he said.

● Light Weapon

Speaking of the FN rifle, Gen. Rockingham said "we want to arrive at a light weapon with a wide range in perfection. The better the weapon, the fewer you need and the lighter your supply problem.

"All this means you must have new techniques. You must have more digging and give greater attention to camouflage. Thus, if you should be spotted any A-bombed damage is relatively small."

The new Regiment of Canadian Guards—the subject of considerable national controversy since they were formed some months ago—fitted into the Canadian military picture "extremely well," he said. "They are doing a good job and are a great asset to the Canadian army. They are setting a very high standard.

● No Blow-Up

Speaking of Korea and the Far East he said he didn't think there was any chance of a blow-up there in the near future. "But," he added, "I'm a notoriously poor strategist."

It was his unofficial opinion, however, that the Chinese Reds had decided Korea was definitely unprofitable. "They have decided to call it off and remain in a situation of semi-tension." This applied equally to Indo-China as, in both countries, the price paid by the Reds has been "extremely heavy".

"It is obviously much easier to hold the attention of the Reds in this way, although we are far from a settlement and there is not much chance of one."

● Invasion Unlikely

As far as Formosa was concerned, it was extremely unlikely that Nationalists would "take a swing at the mainland" and it was equally unlikely the Reds would attempt to invade the island.

In his opinion the most likely course of events would be a lot of "high pressure, much shouting and waving of arms". As far as the Reds were concerned it's "hardly worth otherwise from their point of view".

The big, new barracks now being built by the army at Edmonton and Sarcee military camp was not indicative of any general strategic trend west and north as far as Canada was concerned, he said. It was, rather, an attempt to get proper permanent stations built for units "we are likely to have to maintain for a long time."

"We want them to have good places to live and train when they are not overseas."

● Pressure Decreases

"We have been in a terrible state of turmoil during the past few years" but, now that the Korean war was over, the army had more units to "juggle with" and the pressure was not so great.

New military installations were being built in Eastern Canada as well as in the West. Troops stationed evenly across the country were strategically valuable and helped in recruiting.

He said it was quite likely Canada would have to maintain troops in Germany for a long time, particularly in view of Great Britain's recent decision to maintain four divisions and a tactical air force on the continent for many years to come.

"After all," he said, "we are building homes and schools over there, aren't we?"

● Regiment Parades

The 1st Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, played host to Gen. Rockingham this morning and staged a mass physical training demonstration and regimental parade in his honor.

A regiment new to the West but actually the oldest regiment in the Canadian Army, the unit paraded in its own unique fashion, marching past with rifles at the trail in quick and double time.

Commenting that he noticed many new men in their ranks, Gen. Rockingham complimented the unit on the high standard of its drill and the steadiness on parade. "It's times like this," he said, "when you learn you are part of a team".

OLD SOLDIERS NEVER DIE

COLONEL DOUGLAS G. L. CUNNINGTON, O.B.E., M.C., V.D.—the man who wouldn't die—will retire this year as honorary Secretary-Treasurer of the Alberta United Services Institute, a post he has held for eight years as well as being Business Manager of the annual Journal.

But his association with the Institute does more than run back for less than a decade. He is an original member of the Institute—or the Alberta Military Institute as it was originally known—since 1920. He was director in 1924 and 1925, was vice-president in 1926 and the following year was elected president. In 1926 and 1927 he was editor of the Journal as well as a director of the Institute.

COL. DOUGLAS G. L. CUNNINGTON

Col. Cunnington has been associated with things military all his life. In brief his Army career runs like this: 1902-1906, Shropshire Imperial Yeomanry; Corps of Guides, 1916; served during the First Great War, 1916-1918; 1st Battalion Calgary Regiment, N.P.A.M., from its organization in 1921 and was O.C. from 1927 to 1930; Brigade Major 24th Infantry Brigade 1924 to 1926; (Col.) Commandant 24th Infantry Brigade 1930 to 1936; he reorganized and was Commandant of the 19th Field Brigade, R.C.A., 1936 to 1940; G.S.O. 1 1941 to 1945; vacated April, 1945, and was discharged September, 1945.

● Wins Military Cross

That is the skeleton of his military career. The flesh and sinew make an interesting story. He rose from a private to commissioned rank during the First Great War; won the Military Cross; was taken prisoner by the Germans; was left for dead on the battlefield and was reported dead to his wife in Calgary.

Perhaps the best way of telling the story of his "death", and his subsequent rebirth is to let him tell it himself. In 1923, during an address to members of the institute, he outlined his brush with death and his enforced "holiday" in Germany. Here is the speech just as he gave it 32 years ago:

"Whether one believes in the doctrine of re-incarnation or not, it is seldom that a man is killed, a monument put over his grave, his wife paid a pension and he himself give the story to a meeting of this kind.

● Flank in Air

"The situation on the morning of 11th August, 1918, was as follows: The 50th Battalion, to which I had the honour to belong, had made two attacks the day before and found its right flank in the air, as the Battalion on the flank was unable to make headway. During the night, 10th - 11th, we made a defensive flank from our forward position back to this Battalion. My Platoon was at the apex of the obtuse angle. Early on the 11th, the Bosche attacked very determinedly on the front immediately to our left, driving back our line. This left the Battalion front absolutely in the air on both flanks, and orders were given for us to fall back slightly and conform to the general line. The Bosch meanwhile attacked our front heavily. My platoon had to hold its ground until the forward Company was clear and then retire through our own Company. During this operation I was shot through the chest, my stretcher-bearer pronounced me dead and I was left where I was.

"A fellow officer, Major Jim Taylor, of Medicine Hat, hearing that I was a casualty, worked his way forward immediately, with a runner, to see what had become of me and my platoon. He found, as he thought, my dead body (and took my revolver as a keepsake). What was left of my platoon had got out. He had a narrow escape himself getting back as the Bosch were right on top of him.

● Grave Found

"About four days later, the Battalion was again on that same front and the Scout Officer, with a scout from our company, went out one night to look for my body, in what had now become No Man's Land. They found a grave amongst others with my tunic and equipment on it. This was added proof, if any were needed, that I was not only dead, but buried!

"Meanwhile, the news had come to Calgary through the usual channels and my wife and family notified.

"Here let me pay tribute to Lt.-Col. L. F. Page, D.S.O., my C.O. The letter to my people, whose address I always kept as 'next-of-kin', bore date of August 11th. When it is remembered the strain he must have been under—for his Battalion had had heavy losses, including three Company Commanders and two second-in-command of company, besides several subalterns, many N.C.O.'s and men to mention only the last two days fighting—it is worthy of note to find him writing to the next-of-kin of each of these officers the same night.

● Pronounced Dead

"After I was hit I heard the cry of 'stretcher-bearer', and the thought that went through my mind as he slashed my equipment, cutting the straps of my glasses, compass, etc., 'Why the hurry; why not undo them?' However, he decided I was gone and dashed away to see to someone else.

"To me it seems as if I sat apart and saw all this done; saw the fellows stumble over my feet and legs) which were black with bruises for weeks after) as they hurried to take up the new position; saw all this, I say, as if it applied to someone else. For a long time there was silence.

"Then someone came and looked me over. I realized that it was someone, but was unable to let them know I knew. That must have been Major Jim Taylor, referred to above.

"After what seemed a long time someone else came and checked me up. I spoke to them as I did not want them to go away. The man said he would go and get help. After this I became fully conscious and took stock of my surroundings. I took out my field dressing (I was wearing a private's tunic), and attempted to break the iodine phial, but found to my horror that I had not the strength to break it. So I bit it and filled by mouth with iodine. I tried to spit it out and discovered that the effort to expectorate went out through my back. Then I began to realize that I was in a bad way. After drinking some water from my water-bottle near and letting it run out of my mouth, I lay very still. Some time later I saw two Germans coming towards me with an evil-looking, long bayonet sticking out in front of them. I found out afterwards that their stretcher-bearers had these things to protect them from our wounded. They looked me over, spoke to me in English, and proceeded to dress my wounds. To do this effectually, they removed my tunic, to get at the hole in my back. (It was a very small hole in front.) That was how the jacket came to be found later on my supposed grave. They then put me in a big German ground-sheet, put a hole through it and carried me out. They were little fellows, and I had a very bumpy ride.

● Germans Curious

"By this time it was getting dark. German soldiers displayed much curiosity about this Canadian officer, and as I was carried back they would drop me down and pull aside the ground-sheet to disclose what I looked like.

"At last I was dropped before a German Intelligence Officer, who was anxious to know all about me. But by his questions showed that he knew as much as I did. I told him so, when he informed me that was his business. He questioned my claim to be an officer, as letters in my pockets were addressed to 'Private Young'. After I had explained that they belonged to my batman who had been killed the day previously he took my word at once. This is an interesting fact, as an Imperial Territorial Captain, whom I afterwards met in hospital, was never able to persuade the Germans that he was not a regular soldier, and he suffered accordingly.

"When this German officer had enquired if he could do anything for me; had given me a drink at his flask (which was much appreciated), he saluted and left me. Always after that I insisted on the Germans saluting me which they invariably did, and I am sure it paid. I was then carried on until I came to Field Dressing Station of sorts, where I was transferred to a stretcher, and then on to a Casualty Clearing Station. Here there were crowds of Bosch wounded (I saw none of our own), several doctors and one lone sister.

● Another Close One

"This sister saw all the wounded, and was absolutely worked to death. She certainly looked it. I was given a couple of injections of some sort and left. Later I was carried out to wait my turn to go in an ambulance. I was the last to be placed in the last ambulance, a horse affair, and we started down the road. Our guns were shelling this road, and the frequent bursts lit up the country as we trotted along. At last there came a much heavier crump and to the accompaniment of much shouting and yelling my ambulance galloped by what had been the ambulance directly in front of us and on which the gunners had got a direct hit. The sight was horrible, and my feelings can be better imagined than described. I must have fainted, for I remembered no more until I woke up on a hospital train. During this time I had no record of the passing of time, but I was hit on the 11th and my temperature chart began on the 16th. So I was five days between the field and the hospital.

"On the train I had a rotten time. The Young Bosche in charge of my coach was a particularly objectionable type and took every opportunity of insulting me. The German wounded who could get about, gave me water, called me Tommy and tried to persuade me to smoke some of their vile cigarettes. Doctors and nurses did nothing to me but inject morphine at frequent intervals.

"There is no doubt that both here and in the hospital at first, they all thought I was sure to die, and was of no interest, and it was not until I had apparently no intention of passing out that they began to set about ensuring my recovery. It is only fair to state that, when once they made up their mind to get me round, they certainly did their best to make a job of it.

● Arrival at Dusseldorf

"It was dark and raining when I arrived at Dusseldorf, and I was laid on a stretcher on the platform waiting my turn to go to a hospital.

"A Red Cross woman gave me coffee (?), while lying there and eventually I was taken in a street car fitted up like the interior of a hospital train. They took me to what had been the Garrison Hospital in pre-war days. Here there were all sorts of wounded prisoners from all the allies. There were British and French, crowds of Russians and Portugese, a sprinkling of Serbian and Italian, one Romainian and one Senegalese.

"They were all mixed together indiscriminately, but I was put in a room where there were two British flying officers. These two officers left shortly afterwards to go to a prison camp and I did not see them again.

"My experience in this hospital, where I remained until I left for England at the end of December, was varied. Many amusing things happened, and some not so amusing. For instance, when a big bulgy of a German sergeant gave me a bath in a room with the window taken out and turned the cold shower on me when I was being dried. I believe he hoped it would finish me. This sergeant spoke perfect English. Said he was a British subject, and wanted the war to end so that he could go back to 'his country' where he had a store in London!

● Heads Up !

"The system of dressing the wounded was that the doctor and the nurse stayed in one place, and all the cases were brought to them. As I was in a separate building, and on a third storey, I had to be carried to them on a stretcher every morning down three flights of stairs and across a big court-yard. This was a very trying ceremony as they always carried me down head first and I was sure they would drop me or slide me off. However they never did.

"There were only two nurses in the hospital, one for the surgical and one for the medical cases. For a while there was also a Red Cross nurse assisting. She it was who told me one day, after the Armistice, when on a visit to the hospital, that she used to come into my room at night, when I first arrived and bend over me to make quite sure I was dead, before having my body laid out. Great, indeed, was her surprise to find me not dead, but very much alive.

"Here, again, I was fortunate, for the old surgical sister had been in a religious house all her life. She had only returned to do her bit for the Fatherland, and she was very kind to me and did her share towards bringing me back to health. The medical sister hated the English and used to glare at me every time she saw me. After they saw I was not going to die, they operated and drained the lung and I got along better. The specialist who operated was a German colonel with several decorations, and he treated me as an 'interesting case' rather than as a prisoner, for he used to have civilian doctors in to look me over, and they would jabber away about me in a most animated manner.

● Welcome Visitors

"I was visited by our own prisoners in the hospital and from outside. The bearing of our boys who had been prisoners for years was truly amazing. They smartened up their prison clothes with the help of Russian tailors, got their badges from home and looked really far smarter than their guards. An Edmonton man, from the 2nd C.M.R.'s, Tony Belfridge by name, was very kind to me. He was at work on the railway and managed to get to me every other Sunday for some weeks, bringing me word of what was going on as far as he knew it and, what was far more generous, tit-bits from his food parcels. These food parcels sent by the Red Cross were, indeed, a blessing; we could not have managed without them, for the food supplied by the Germans to the prisoners was awful—there is no other word for it. As they had little better themselves, one could not complain. My lucky stars was in the ascendent, for the hospital had a cow, which was in full milk, and the first few weeks I was there I had a plentiful supply of milk, which was lucky.

"In the middle of October an Imperial Captain came to my room. He had been to this hospital before, but had been moved to a civilian hospital where the food was better. When he heard that I was in his old room he not only sent me word to hang on to any food parcels that came for him, but he sent me half of his wealth, 10 marks. He knew what it was to be without any money at all, and he could feel for me. The 10 marks enabled me to buy toilet articles and necessities that I really needed and was absolutely without.

● Letters Home

"Prisoners were allowed to write a letter on the first and fifteenth of the month and a post card on each Sunday, the officers were allowed a letter each Sunday. For some weeks I was not able to write myself but was able to dictate to a fellow prisoner and managed to sign the letter. It was in this way that my people learned that I was still in the land of the living. They notified the authorities who confirmed it by wire through Switzerland.

"The men of my own Company who had seen me lying there and left me for dead, refused to believe it until I actually returned and assured them it was really me.

"In hospital we heard of the civilian trouble, that the Kaiser had tried to form a more Democratic government, and at last that revolution had broken out. It spread from city to city, where ever Liebnacht went, and came to Dusseldorf on the 9th of November. All that night there were sounds of the uproar in the city, and some German soldiers in this hospital as prisoners (for self-inflicted wounds, etc.) kicked up an awful shindy.

● Nurses Saved Day

"In the morning, as the town was in the hands of the Revolutionists, they broke out, disarmed the guards, pulled the doctor out of bed and broke his sword and marched out into the town. We were naturally worried as to how we should fare, especially when all the male attendants walked out and went to their homes. If the nurses had not stuck it, we should have been in a bad way for a day or two, but they did stick, and, with the help of some of our own fellows, we managed all right. It gives some light on the state of affairs in Germany when I tell you that within a week all the orderlies were back because there was no food at home and they could get fed at the hospital. That was what brought them back.

"All prisoners who could get around at all now started to get out. They went by train, by boat down the Rhine and by foot. Before very long all our fellows and the French, who could, had gone. Only a few bed patients were left, besides all the Russians.

"A Scotch boy, who had been looking after we two officers, stayed in spite of our urging him to go. They told us that a train was coming to pick us all up and evacuate us via Holland, but it did not come. One night Jock met some Scotch boys out of bounds in the city. They belonged to the 9th Division (Imp.). He found out where they were stationed and the next morning he went after them. He found the quartermaster at a place some miles up the Rhine; got hold of a Colonel Costello, of the 27th Field Ambulance, and told him about us. We learnt later that he wanted to stay and guide them to us, but they sent him on out towards home. Col. Costello then took an ambulance and drove to Dusseldorf where he persuaded the doctor to let him take us out. This was on December 21st, so we were pretty glad to get away. We drove all night in this and another ambulance, landing at Cologne at a C.C.S. in the early hours of the morning.

● Christmas Dinner

"We left that night for the coast by hospital train, and arrived at Boulogne, where I was sent to Lady Hatfield's Hospital, at Wiemer-aux, on Christmas morning. My treatment there was wonderful compared to the last few months, and Christmas dinner with all the good things provided was a real welcome back to my own people.

"Next day I went to England to hospital in London, where good food and care soon brought me on. I stayed there until I left for Canada and Calgary, except for one lung more or less missing and one eye mussed up, not much worse for my experience as a prisoner of war."

But Col. Cunningham's life did not become a humdrum affair when he returned to civilian life. Far from it. Take, for instance, his political career. He was an alderman in 1934 and 1936 and was returned again in 1938. He had been a Conservative supporter for many years and in 1939 he won the Federal by-election in Calgary West, the seat vacated by the late Viscount R. B. Bennett.

The odd experience here was that he held a seat in the House of Commons for three hours in January of 1940. He was defeated in the general election which followed.

● Active Life

In addition to being a soldier and a politician, Col. Cunningham has been a sugar planter, dairy farmer, newspaperman and insurance executive.

NUCLEAR FISSION OLD-FASHIONED

NUCLEAR fission is old-fashioned. The up-to-date slogan of nuclear scientists is nuclear fusion, Nathan Safran, head of the science department of the Provincial Institute of Technology and Art, said May 19th, 1954, while addressing a meeting of the Calgary Liberal Association at which Institute members were guests.

The speaker, who is a graduate of the University of Alberta in science and who received his post-graduate training at the University of Chicago, won a D. H. N. Rutton prize for a paper on synthetic rubber which he submitted to the Engineering Institute of Canada.

In his lecture entitled "The Nucleus", he familiarized the audience with the structure of an atom, which is made up of plutons, positive particles; neutrons, neutral particles, and a nucleus which is surrounded by negative particles called electrons.

"It is similar to a miniature solar system", he explained.

The basic problem of nuclear science is to split the nucleus.

● X-rays Played Part

The historic steps leading to this end and to the present boom of nucleonics was the invention of X-rays in 1897 and the isolation of radium and polonium by the Polish-French scientist Madame Curie.

Her invention and Rutherford's synthetic transmutation—conversion of one element into another—paved the way for other scientists such as Chadwick and the Nobel prize winner Enrico Fermi, who was successful in conducting a series of transmutations of atoms of about 40 different elements.

Three Germans—Strassman, Hahn and Meitner—were the first to start a fission of Uranium 235 in 1939 in Berlin. Professor Anderson of the University of California built the first cyclotron.

● Chain Reaction Initiated

A chain reaction initiated by neutrons which, moving slowly, causes the disintegration of Uranium 235 into Barium, Crypton, neutrons and energy. Such a reaction continued until all fissionable uranium have been completely disrupted.

The detonation in an atom bomb is caused by junction of two different masses of Uranium 235 which form a critical mass.

In a hydrogen bomb, the Uranium 235 is used as a trigger to change tritium, one of the heavy isotopes of hydrogen, into helium plus energy.

"This reaction is called fusion, quite a different synthetic process from fission which is an analytic reaction", Mr. Safran pointed out.

There could be about 22,000,000 kilowat hours of energy released from a pound of material.

● H-Bomb Limited

An atomic bomb is limited as far as size is concerned, but this does not apply to an H-bomb. This bomb having no limits as far as size, could have unlimited destructive power.

Speaking on development of atomic research, Mr. Safran compared the $6,000 devoted to research in 1940 in the United States with 12 billion dollars in 1950.

He expressed hope that this monumental effort would lead to improvement of our civilization rather than to a total destruction, and described in principal how atomic reactions could be turned into thermic and kinetic energy.

He illustrated the radiation of samples of various Canadian uranium ore on the scale and sound of a geiger counter.

COL. G. E. SANDERS DIES

COL. GILBERT E. SANDERS, C.M.G., D.S.O., one of the true builders of the West, died April 19th, 1955, in the Colonel Belcher hospital.

He was the first president of The Alberta United Services Institute in 1920, and was president the following year as well. In addition, he was a life member of the Institute.

The death of Col. Sanders, pioneer police officer, veteran of three wars, a man honored by his king, and an early Calgary police magistrate, marks the end of an era in the history both of Calgary and Alberta.

Born 91 years ago on Christmas Day, he rode across the prairies before Alberta was a province and knew British Columbia before it was part of Canada.

● Born in West

Col. Sanders was born at Fort Yale, an outpost 100 miles up the Fraser canyon from Vancouver, the son of Edward H. and Annie Sanders. His father was magistrate, gold commissioner, and a member of the colonial legislation.

In his own time, his father had served as one of 200 adventurous young Englishmen in Europe's crack cavalry unit, the Austrian Cavalry, and with the Second Hussars, British-German Legion, in the Crimean War. His grandfather was a major in the British Army.

In the early years of young Sanders' life, British Columbia was but a colonial dependency administered by England and there were only a few Indian youngsters for childhood friends. As there was no school he could attend, he was sent to England at an early age and attended King Alfred's Grammar School at Wantage.

● Enters R.M.C.

Returning to Canada in 1880, he entered Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont., with an eye to an army career. In 1884, however, the time of his graduation, the Northwest Mounted Police was clamoring for officers and, at the age of 21, he found himself commissioned as an inspector in that famous force.

The young police officer had hardly begun his new duties in Fort Macleod—then in the Northwest Territories—when the Riel Rebellion erupted throughout the West.

In the war which followed he served under Gen. Sir F. G. Middleton, commander of the Canadian militia, and saw service primarily around Carleton and Prince Albert.

● Critical of Middleton

In later years Col. Sanders was critical of the way Gen. Middleton handled the rebellion. He felt the Mounted Police could have settled the dispute with little bloodshed and disruption if they had been allowed to handle it in their own fashion.

Returning to police duties at Fort Macleod when the fighting was over, his fairness and ability were quickly recognized. After two years at the Fort he was accepted as trustworthy by the Indians.

Later, when 200 Blood Indians met with the lieutenant-governor of the Territories to talk over some difficulties which were arising, the Indians would not begin the conference until their friend, Inspector Sanders, was present.

● Called "Calf Shirt"

"Calf Shirt", as they called him, was summoned from his duties as orderly officer to attend. As a result of the meeting, Sanders was sent to Fort Belknap, south of Maple Creek, where an agreement was reached with the Gros Ventres and Assiniboines of the United States.

As a result of this meeting, poaching and depredations across the border and into Canada by these Indians ceased and were never resumed.

In 1890 Inspector Sanders was attached to the U.S. forces engaged in subduing the Sioux rebellion, a rebellion promoted by treaty grievances and the hysteria of a new ghost dance. Ten years later he was put in charge of the Crowsnest Pass area where he had the task of maintaining law and order and acting as magistrate.

● A Difficult Task

The area was a hotbed of disputes in those days. The C.P.R. was putting a branch line through at the time, and strikes and labor troubles were numerous and riotous.

When he left the area on posting to Battleford, the Pass was a comparatively peaceful and orderly district.

Now the South African War began. Serving on the African Veldt with the Canadian Mounted Rifles, Major Sanders was wounded twice, twice mentioned-in-dispatches and capped his service there with the award of the Distinguished Service Order.

● Headed R.N.W.M.P. Here

Returning to Canada in 1901, he was given command of the R.N.W.M.P. in Calgary and, in 1906, was posted to Regina to command the training division there. Two years later he went to Athabasca Landing and, that same year, the three-year-old Alberta government called on him to serve in Calgary as police magistrate.

On the outbreak of the First Great War, he raised a company of the 1st Canadian Pioneers and went with it to Winnipeg to train.

TRAINING — SURVIVAL SECRET

REASONS for Arctic training and rigors of Arctic life were explained May 26th, 1954, at the Garrison Officers' Mess by S/L Scott E. Alexander, R.C.A.F., O.C. of the Air Force Survival Training School.

Speaking to a capacity audience of Alberta United Services Institute members, "Alex of the Arctic" told how air crews perished north of the timber line for want of experience in polar conditions.

"There's no secret about survival in the Arctic," said the squadron leader, "it's just a matter of training. The only way a man can get that training is when he's forced to meet the elements which would kill him if he didn't know how to fight back."

● Suicides Numerous

There had been numerous incidents of pilots and air crews committing suicide following crash landings in the north.

"One fighter pilot came down within a few miles of base and blew his brains out within a few minutes of landing. His aircraft was found four hours later.

"Only one thing drove him to that extreme—lack of knowledge and shock. In another instance seven men came down within six miles of help. They had snowshoes and supplies. They knew their air position. Three of them took off in a life raft to make a 300-mile journey, and were never seen again."

● Decisive Fifteen Minutes

All airmen who crash land in the Arctic suffer from shock, said S/L Scott, and it was the first fifteen minutes on the ground that determined whether they lived. And shock at 60 below is a different matter from shock in normal temperatures. Trained men would do the right things in the first quarter of an hour.

The Arctic survival courses taught men how to recognize the signs which meant life. How to catch, kill and butcher animals. How to fish through eight feet of ice. How to make survival rations stretch. How to take care of the injured in adverse conditions, and how to make fire and provide shelter.

● Russians Far Ahead

The Russians are far ahead of Canada in Arctic operations, he said. As far back as 1936 they had established 135 weather bases. In 1937 they established a weather base at the North Pole. Siberia had a population of 40,000,000 people of whom 14,000,000 lived north of the Arctic Circle. In an emergency, they could supply more personnel trained in Arctic conditions than there were in the whole Dominion of Canada.

Canada was now faced with bigger commitments north of the timber line, due to civil and military aviation routes and new weather stations. In these circumstances, Arctic survival training was essential for Canadian flyers.

AWARD MARKS MEMORY

THE first in a series of annual scholarships to perpetuate the memory of Wing Commander Donald B. Freeman, D.F.C., killed November 29th, 1953, when his Mustang fighter plane crashed near Millarville, will be awarded this year, Lt.-Col. W. K. Jull, O.B.E., E.D., Q.C., A.U.S.I. president, announced.

Sponsored by the Alberta United Services Institute, the scholarship is for $300 and will be awarded each year to a member of the army, navy or air force cadets. Col. Jull is chairman of the Institute's Scholarship Committee.

A well-known, respected and popular officer, W/C Freeman was commanding officer of No. 403 (City of Calgary) Reserve Squadron, R.C.A.F., at the time of his death. He was instantly killed when his plane went out of control during routine flying practice and dived into rugged country from a height of 27,000 feet.

● Keeps Alive Memory

To be known as the Wing Commander Freeman memorial scholarship, the purpose of the award is "to keep alive the memory of his record of service in the Royal Canadian Air Force in the last war, and later, in the reserve, as well as his many fine qualities" as an example to those in the cadet services in Southern Alberta.

W/C D. B. FREEMAN

The scholarship is available to cadets in Grades XI and XII living south of a line through Red Deer. The winner must have a good record as a member of a cadet corps, as a high school student and in athletics and community activities and who intends to take a course of training at an approved technical school or university in Canada. Candidates who have been accepted for a service scholarship are not eligible.

● Award Made Annually

The award will be made towards the end of August each year and the winner will be expected to enroll as a student in the same year.

The winner must undertake to join, if possible, an Officer Cadet Training Corps or unit of the Canadian militia. On fulfilling these conditions and after passing the examination tests given in the year, the scholarship will be paid by January 15th of the following year.

Full particulars of the terms of the scholarship and application forms are being forwarded to the officers in charge of navy, army and air force cadet units in the area. Applications must reach the secretary, Alberta United Services Institute, by June 25th of each year.

It is hoped that Mrs. Freeman will present the first award this year.

SUBS CHIEF NAVY TARGET

THE chief role of Canada's navy in any future war will be played against the submarine, a naval officer said recently in Calgary. For that reason, this country has developed "the finest anti-submarine destroyer escorts in the world".

Captain William Strange, O.B.E., C.D., R.C.N., director of naval informations, Ottawa, told a press conference that of 87 orders placed in 1949 for Canada's bigger and better navy, 61 of the 87 ships have been laid down and 41 launched. In all, 27 have been completed.

Six anti-submarine destroyer escorts have been launched and 14 more are on order.

● Finest in World

"I am pretty confident they will be the finest of their class in the world," said the navy man. "We have good reason to be proud of them. They will all have been Canadian-designed and built."

Capt. Strange said he had "no doubt" that Canada's "big job" in any future conflict would be anti-submarine and mine-sweeping.

Russia has 400 submarines in commission, he said. When the Second Great War started, the Germans had only 60. The allied navies and air forces sank 781. That had still left the Germans with 240 at war's end.

● Liaison Said Poor

The Germans never really had good liaison between navy and air force. Even so, their defence against allied attacks on their "subs" had been very effective. The Russians, on the other hand, had excellent liaison, and their submarines would be a "much tougher egg than those used by the enemy in the last war".

The Russian fleet air arm, conceded the captain in answer to questions, was "designed mainly for defence". It consists of 4,000 land-based air-craft.

Russia's submarine fleet, however, would have "no difficulty" in reaching the open sea and getting into action. It was also possible the Russians would occupy the Scandinavian peninsula, and in that event her under-water craft would be able to operate "comfortably" from the Norwegian fjords.

● Fleet of One Hundred Ships

It was Canada's intention to have a fleet of about 100 ships". Recruiting for the navy would continue "up to a ceiling of 21,000 men". At present, regular forces amounted to nearly 19,000.

The great need now, declared the captain, was to get trained artisans. The navy depended more and more on skilled personnel.

In general, however, recruiting was "going well ahead of last year".

While here he addressed a joint meeting of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs and the Alberta United Services Institute in Mewata Armories.

FIRE FAILS TO HALT ACE

FIRE may have destroyed the officers' lounge at the Garrison Officers' Mess, Mewata Armories during the week-end (Jan. 30, 1955), but it didn't stop G/C Douglas Bader, D.S.O. and Bar, D.F.C. and Bar, legless war ace of the Second Great War, from rising on his artificial legs Monday night and telling members of the Alberta United Services Institute all about the battle of Britain.

G/C DOUGLAS BADER

Speaking off the record to one of the largest gatherings of the A.U.S.I. ever, the man who refused to stay out of the war simply because he didn't have his own legs, was a tremendous success. The meeting was held in the Garrison Sergeants' Mess through the courtesy of C.S.M. (WO2) Ted Marshall, mess president, and other members of the mess.

● Roars of Laughter

Although his speech didn't contain too much that was new, it drew roars of laughter and rounds of applause from his admiring audience.

No sooner had he started his address than he halted, looked around and bellowed in a loud voice: "It's hot in here". Then, to the delight of the sweating hundreds before him, he peeled off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and continued talking".

While a roar of applause greeted his action, no one followed through on his example.

● Pilots Know Best !

He puffed on his cigar, gave out with Churchillian stances on occasion, jiggled about like a ballet dancer and assured everyone present that the front line pilots and soldiers knew more about fighting battles than the "brass". He hastened to add that he was only fooling, of course.

As former commander of No. 242 Squadron, R.A.F., Bader was one of the first commanding officers Canadian pilots served under during the Battle of Britain and it was he who evolved fighter tactics that upset the text books of pre-war days and are largely in use today.

Although he never mentioned such a thing—and no one else did, either—he was a living symbol to everyone present of the power of the mind over physical handicaps. Legless though he was, he was personally credited with the shooting down of 22½ German planes during the Second Great War.

● Took His Legs

When he was finally shot down and taken prisoner by the Germans, they had to take his artificial limbs away from him. Nor would they give them back again until he promised not to try to escape any more.

His courage and exploits are amply testified to by the two Distinguished Service Orders and the two Distinguished Flying Crosses that are his by right. In addition, he also wears the Legion d'Honneur and the Crois de Guerre.

ESCAPE THROUGH EUROPE

ONE of the champion escapers of the Second Great War treated members of the Alberta United Services Institute to a fascinating account of his experiences April 2nd in Mewata Armories Officers' Mess.

Doug. Collins, M.M., formerly of the Gloucestershire Regiment and the Intelligence Corps, chalked up a total of 11 "breaks" from Stalags, castles and Secret police headquarters in a trek to freedom which took him from Upper Silesia, across Central Europe, and through the Balkans.

Mr. Collins escaped from the notorious Stalag VIIIB—dressed as a Nazi Storm Trooper—just a year after his capture at Dunkirk in 1940. It was his fourth and final attempt to get out of Germany, three others having failed. The first had taken him to the borders of occupied Poland, the second to Slovakia—where he was captured in a crippled condition only 15 miles from the Hungarian frontier—and freedom—while the third took him across Poland to "within spitting distance of Russia".

● Just As Well

"Perhaps it was just as well I didn't get there," reminisced the escapee. "I was dressed in incredible rags, and had no means of proving my identity. It is extremely unlikely the Russians would have believed my tale. As I learned later, no one had succeeded in getting to Russia at that time—or if they did no one ever heard of them again—and the Russians had an even greater spy mania than usual. One can hardly blame them. They were waiting for Hitler's invasion of their country, after all."

Following this near success, the persistent sergeant, as he was then, was given an "extra-long" period in the punishment camp and in solitary confinement—in addition to the occasional beating-up—and afterwards placed under special surveillance. But . . .

"I was determined not to sweat the war out in Germany, and I finally managed to get the Poles in the camp to help me."

● Poles Helped

Mr. Collins said he would "never forget the Poles". The British thought they were having a tough time as prisoners, "but it was ten times worse for the Poles. Their country had been subjugated and prisoners' families could be persecuted if the men didn't behave themselves. "In spite of this there was never any hesitation in giving aid to their allies."

Poles in the camp administration made it possible for the Britisher to change his identity and get out to a working party. From there—clad in SA uniform made by Polish tailors—he escaped with a companion to Hungary, crossing the Carpathian Mountains in Czechoslovakia in the process.

● Embassy Gone

There, bitter disappointment awaited the intrepid pair. Ten days before their arrival, the British Embassy had left for home in view of the coming war with Russia. The United States consul was in charge of British interests, "and according to international law we should still have been sent home". But they weren't and while negotiations were still going on Pearl Harbour was bombed, the United States came into the war, and Consul left "and we were almost back where we started".

Although officially "internees", the "prize and interesting birds" were closely watched even though very well treated by the Hungarians. A winter attempt to reach the partisans in Yugoslavia failed, and Collins' companion—Sgt. Lancaster of the Sherwood Foresters—narrowly missed death by shooting when the two slipped down the battlements of a Danube fort during a second try. The guards had seen a concealed rope, drawn the obvious conclusion, and staged a hot "reception party".

Lancaster missed death by inches as the soldiers opened up at him in darkness and at point blank range. "In any case", said the speaker philosophically, "we wouldn't have been able to make it together, because the rope broke and Lancaster smashed his ankle in addition to nearly getting his head shot off."

● Thrown in Dungeon

Both were placed in a "pitch-black, damp, unsanitary dungeon 30 feet below ground". Here, they "reflected unhappily" on their lot for the next 30 days, after which they would transferred to an "escape proof" castle for "naughty Polish officer-internees" not far from Budapest.

They got out of this by descending 80-foot walls in "proper Hollywood style".

"That break had everything," said Mr. Collins with amusement. "We had to wait for thunder, lightning and rain before we dared venture out on to the parapet, which was patrolled by sentries. Then we had to crawl to within a few yards of a sentry-box before sneaking over the castle walls at their lowest point. Once again there was an accident, but this time it was my turn. I sprained my ankle after falling the last 20 feet."

But the two made east for Yugoslavia, tried for three weeks to reach the partisans, found everyone thought they were German spies, and made off for Roumania.

Once there, they gave themselves up, reasoning they would be taken to Bukarest for interrogation, and that from there they would make off on the final lamp for Turkey.

● Nearly Worked

It nearly worked out that way. As far as has been established, they are the only people ever to escape from the Roumanian Secret Police headquarters. This they did after waiting for six weeks to be "smuggled" across the Black Sea by the Roumanian authorities. "But Roumanian promises are ephemeral, so we decided to look after ourselves."

The two made their break in broad daylight, and were caught while crossing the Danube into Bulgaria. At that point they were only 150 miles from Turkey and home.

But their efforts did not go unrewarded. They were finally flown out to Southern Italy, which was then occupied by the allies, and got back to Britain in time to participate in the final thrust through Northwest Europe.

Part of their adventures have been described by Times Correspondent Jerome Caminada in "My Purpose Holds," published in 1952.

Mr. Caminada — who also escaped from Germany via the Balkans — met Mr. Collins and his companion in both Hungary and Roumania.

The hostesses were Mrs. W. K. Jull, wife of the Institute president; Mrs. Dollard Menard, wife of the Area Commandant; Mrs. Reg. Jackson, wife of Capt. Reg. Jackson, R.C.N.(R), and Mrs. Gordon Lewis, wife of Group Captain Gordon Lewis of Edmonton.

VIMY DINNER

THE Vimy Dinner this year was cancelled due to the tragic death of Rodney Adamson, M.P., and Mrs. Adamson in the aircraft disaster over Moose Jaw, Sask., on the morning of April 8th, while the flight was proceeding to Calgary where Mr. Adamson was to be the guest speaker at the dinner.

During the Second Great War Mr. Adamson was a captain, and Mrs. Adamson was a major in the Canadian Women's Army Corps. Mr. Adamson served with the R.A.F. during the First Great War and in intelligence in the Second Great War. Part of his education was at Cambridge University; he was a mining engineer.

Mr. Adamson's address was to have been "Political Warfare, the Ultimate Weapon".
